

AGRICULTURAL LEADERSHIP, EDUCATION AND COMMUNICATION

Inspire and empower others to engage with agriculture and the environment.

College of Agricultural & Environmental Sciences
UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA

The Department of Agricultural Leadership, Education and Communication (ALEC) is an award-winning group of researchers, teachers, Extension specialists and students committed to communicating the critical fields of agricultural and environmental science. ALEC contributes to Georgia's land-grant mission of improving lives and organizations through strategic education and communication on agricultural, environmental and sustainability issues.

Discover the experiences of ALEC students and learn more about scholarship, study abroad and research opportunities by scanning the QR code.

Our Deans' Promise is a commitment to provide students with enrichment opportunities like undergraduate research, symposia, experiential learning and internships.

The CAES Undergraduate Research Program allows students the opportunity to conduct research under the direction of a CAES faculty member, giving them hands-on research experience at an undergraduate level.

UGA and CAES provide a multitude of study abroad options, from two-week adventures to semester-long exchange programs.

“I value the support of the ALEC department. Professors are always willing to help you with assignments or talk with you about your goals and provide support to ensure you reach your goals. ALEC provides you with a home away from home and people who truly care about you.”

–Megan Cherry,
agricultural communication major

Pathways to Success

What can you do with a degree from ALEC? Learn more or ask an advisor at alec.uga.edu.

Educators and faculty
Cooperative Extension agents and administrators
Corporate trainers
Writers and editors
Lobbyists and policy specialists
Advertising and marketing professionals